

Hi, all...very quick one for you today. We've added some "flyouts" to the website buttons now that, when you place your mouse cursor over the button, will display some text telling you what's in that section of the site. It's a minor convenience item, but should help you when you're looking for a certain kit or component. By simply placing your mouse over a button (say, "Recovery Systems", for example), you'll be shown what's in that section of the site ("Parachutes, Piston Systems, Shock Cords", in this example). This way you don't have to open the whole page to see if what you want is there.

I know it's only a minor timesaver, but it can be a help if you have a slower connection so you don't have to open a whole page and wait for it to download to see if what you want is there. Happy flying! (By the way, got in some nice modroc flights today...when there's 60 degree weather in Michigan in early March, you take advantage of it!).
